

Strengths Exploration Report

of Anton Nazarov, 2/25/2026

Meet your strengths: strengths psychology in a nutshell

Welcome! Let's discover what makes you strong.

We all have strengths — unique ways of thinking, feeling, and acting that help us thrive. Just like fingerprints, no two people have the same combination of strengths. Some of your strengths may be more obvious, while others are quieter but still important.

What are strengths, really?

At metaFox, we build on the psychological concept of Character Strengths. These are qualities like curiosity, empathy, honesty, and courage — human traits that have been valued across cultures and throughout history. They form the foundation of who you are and how you connect with the world.

Character strengths are different from talents (like musical ability) or learned skills (like time management) in that they make who you are. They are deeply rooted parts of your personality, yet they can grow and develop over time.

What makes a strength?

Your strengths can be understood through three dimensions, originally framed by psychologist Alex Linley:

- Performance – Are you good at it?
- Use – Do you use it frequently in daily life?
- Energy – Does it give you energy (or drain you)?

Each strength expresses itself in a unique combination of these factors, which helps us understand how to best leverage or develop it.

Categorising Strengths

Based on these dimensions, we can group strengths into four categories:

Realised Strengths

High performance, used often, energizing

Realized strengths are areas you do well, bringing energy and fulfillment. Keep them front of mind and use them more to achieve Flow experiences, success and well-being.

Unrealized Strengths

Used rarely but energizing

Using unrealized strengths gives you energy but you aren't able to fully apply them in daily life. Bring them more into awareness and find activities to apply them.

Learned Behavior

Used often but draining

Learned behaviors are areas you do often (and possibly well) but find draining. Recognize these behaviors and explore if you can apply strengths or delegate the activities.

Weaknesses

Low performance and draining

Weaknesses are areas where you struggle and feel drained. Become aware of them and, instead of struggling, "delegate with pride" all tasks requiring them.

The metaFox Strengths

To make them more applicable for our language today, we phrased all strengths as roles. With this tool, you can self-assess strengths, build self-awareness and learn what strengths other people see in you.

The model is designed on psychometric scientific standards in collaboration with a leading university in the field. Overall, the model contains 12 strength roles, with every strength role relating to different strength adjectives, and characteristics of meaningful use as well as advice for when the strength is being over- or underused. This is an example:

Innovator

When using this strength meaningfully...

You create novelty: generating original solutions, connecting ideas and running experiments.

May be described as...

Courageous, Creative, Proactive, Independent

When overusing this strength...

You may open so many new ideas that delivery suffers. You can try limiting experiments and aligning them with priorities.

To use this strength more...

You can try scheduling one small experiment per week and capturing what you learn.

Your Top 5 Strengths

The metaFox Strengths Explorer allows you to self-assess your strengths and also combines this with an average of how other people see you. Both perspectives are taken into account equally to calculate your Top 5 Strengths.

Communicator

You ensure shared understanding: summarizing clearly, choosing precise words, and aligning interpretations.

Examiner

You safeguard quality: verifying information, catching inconsistencies, and spotting risks early.

Inventor

You create novelty: generating original solutions, connecting ideas and running experiments.

Learner

You learn and improve: seeking feedback, reflecting, and practicing changes until they stick.

Decision Maker

You mobilize commitment: naming the decision, choosing a direction, and clarifying ownership and next steps.

Your Strengths Radar

Your "Strengths Radar" shows all 12 metaFox Strength Roles according to your self-assessment.

- Use: How often you use the strength in daily life
- Energy: How much energy the strength gives you when used

Your Strengths Categories

Your assessments measured 'Energy' (Does using this strength drain you or give you energy?) and 'Use' (How often do you make use of this strength in daily life?) during your self-assessment. This allows you to differentiate between Realised and Unrealised Strengths.

During feedback surveys, your peers feedback 'Success' (How successful do you deploy this strength?). This allows us to get the differentiation above more solid and additionally differentiate between Learned Behaviors (activities that drain your energy but you still perform quite successfully) and Weaknesses (activities that you best proudly delegate to other people).

Based on this, your Strengths can be categorised as follows:

Realised Strengths

You can build on these strengths. They make you who you are. At the same time, make sure you don't overuse them. If a strength is used too much it becomes a weakness. For example, extreme self-confidence can be perceived as arrogance.

Main questions to explore in this category:

What do you want to leverage even more?

What do you want to tune down a bit as you might be overusing it?

Communicator

Charismatic, Clarifying,
Considerate, Tactful

Using this strength meaningfully: you ensure shared understanding: summarizing clearly, choosing precise words, and aligning interpretations.

When overused: You may over-explain and overwhelm others. You can try pausing and asking what the other person needs to know.

Examiner

Analytical, Attentive,
Objective, Prudent

Using this strength meaningfully: you safeguard quality: verifying information, catching inconsistencies, and spotting risks early.

When overused: You may overcheck and slip into perfectionism. You can try defining the needed accuracy level and stopping after that.

Inventor

Courageous, Creative,
Independent, Proactive

Using this strength meaningfully: you create novelty: generating original solutions, connecting ideas and running experiments.

When overused: You may open so many new ideas that delivery suffers. You can try limiting experiments and aligning them with priorities.

Unrealised Strengths

Putting these «hidden» strengths to work would give you energy. How can you make space for them in everyday life?

Motivator

Energetic, Joyful,
Optimistic, Playful

Using this strength meaningfully: you lift energy: creating momentum, positivity, and morale when engagement drops.

To make room for this strength: You can try one small energy move per day: humor, appreciation, or a short celebration of progress.

Networker

Approachable,
Connected, Engaging,
Trusting

Using this strength meaningfully: you build connections: initiating contact, staying visible, and creating useful relationships across contexts.

To make room for this strength: You can try initiating one new conversation per week with a clear purpose (learn, connect, or move work forward).

Facilitator

Cooperative, Forgiving,
Generous, Helpful

Using this strength meaningfully: you enable participation and alignment: helping groups include voices, work through tension, and adapt together.

To make room for this strength: You can try aligning on one shared goal and one "who does what by when".

Learned behaviors

These are strengths you use often, but they tend to drain your energy. They may have become habits or responsibilities. Be mindful of how often you rely on them — and make sure you create space to recharge.

Coach

Appreciative, Compassionate, Empathetic, Kind

Pragmatist

Efficient, Flexible, Focused, Pragmatic

Guardian

Fair, Loyal, Sincere, Wise

Weaknesses

These strengths feel draining and aren't central to how you show up. That's okay. The key is to be aware of it — focus your energy elsewhere and seek support when needed.

Self-Regulator

Calm, Resilient, Self-aware, Self-regulating

metaFox Strengths Roles — Overview

Strength Role	Description	Underuse	Overuse
 Inventor · Create novel options and improvements.	You create novelty: generating original solutions, connecting ideas and running experiments.	Sticking to known solutions even when they no longer work.	Too many ideas without follow-through.
 Finisher · Bring work to completion and close open loops.	You bring work to completion: following through, closing open loops, and making sure results last.	Leaving tasks unfinished and jumping to the next thing.	Pushing through nonstop, risking burnout.
 Examiner · Ensure accuracy and sound decisions.	You safeguard quality: verifying information, catching inconsistencies, and spotting risks early.	Missing errors and risks by skipping verification.	Overchecking and slipping into perfectionism.
 Motivator · Raise energy and morale.	You lift energy: creating momentum, positivity, and morale when engagement drops.	Letting low morale persist without intervention.	Overwhelming others with too much energy.
 Coach · Develop people through insight and reflection.	You develop people: listening deeply, asking insight-building questions, and holding space for reflection in 1:1 conversations.	Rushing to solutions instead of listening.	Empathizing so much that boundaries blur.
 Pragmatist · Choose the simplest workable route.	You keep things workable: simplifying, making trade-offs, and choosing good-enough solutions under real constraints.	Overcomplicating things and getting stuck in analysis.	Oversimplifying until quality or meaning gets lost.
 Facilitator · Connect people and align efforts.	You enable participation and alignment: helping groups include voices, work through tension, and adapt together.	Letting misalignment and tension go unaddressed in groups.	Taking on all coordination and overloading yourself.
 Self-Regulator · Regulate energy and stay steady.	You self-regulate: managing focus, emotions, and energy so you can respond rather than react.	Reacting impulsively without pausing to check in.	Controlling emotions so tightly that you disconnect.
 Learner · Learn through feedback, reflection, and practice.	You learn and improve: seeking feedback, reflecting, and practicing changes until they stick.	Not seeking feedback and repeating the same mistakes.	Staying in learning mode to avoid applying.
 Guardian · Act in line with values and standards.	You act with integrity: making fair choices and keeping commitments and confidences.	Letting standards slide when it's inconvenient.	Holding principles so rigidly that flexibility is lost.
 Visionary · Paint a compelling direction.	You create direction: forming a future picture and linking work to meaning and purpose.	Losing sight of the bigger picture behind daily tasks.	Staying in future talk, disconnected from today.
 Networker · Build connections and initiate contact.	You build connections: initiating contact, staying visible, and creating useful relationships across contexts.	Hesitating to reach out and missing connection opportunities.	Being so present that others get crowded out.
 Organizer · Create structure and priorities.	You create structure: planning, prioritizing, and setting routines so work stays on track.	Working without a plan and losing track of priorities.	Planning so much that action slows down.
 Decision Maker · Close decisions and create commitment.	You mobilize commitment: naming the decision, choosing a direction, and clarifying ownership and next steps.	Avoiding decisions and letting ambiguity linger.	Deciding so fast that buy-in drops.
 Communicator · Make ideas understandable and memorable.	You ensure shared understanding: summarizing clearly, choosing precise words, and aligning interpretations.	Leaving ideas vague and letting misunderstandings grow.	Over-explaining and overwhelming the audience.
 Boundary-Keeper · Protect limits and say no clearly.	You protect limits: saying no, setting boundaries, and being clear about what is and isn't available.	Accepting everything and losing time and energy.	Saying "no" so often that collaboration suffers.

The 16 roles mapped out

